

ABSTRACT

Email users may configure a plurality of automated responses, each tailored for a different type of incoming email message. A user interface enables users to input the plurality of responses. Incoming email messages are examined and flagged according to type. Appropriate responses are then sent out automatically to the various types of emails.